1569-1570, one of his divisions, that of Manuel, had no less than "fourteen hundred pack-mules." (Stirling-Maxwell, "Life of Don John of Austria," vol. i. p. 221, London, 1873.) In the same campaign he also refers to "fifteen hundred sumpter mules." (Idem, p. 276.)

It is pretty evident from the evidence of history that the Goths had no pack-trains, although they had the animals required of them by the Moors. The Goths were a slow-moving people with wagons. Their king, Roderic, at the battle of the Guadalete, rode in a car of ivory, drawn by two white oxen.

There are pack-trains in Spain at the present hour, but the best belong to the Maragatos of Galicia, who are reputed to be of Moorish blood. (See Ford's "Hand-Book of Spain," "Maragatos.")

A recent and trustworthy authority speaks of pack-trains in remote Tibet. "I saw one caravan leave for Shi-gat-sa, in which were over 3,000 pack-animals, mostly mules." (W. W. Rockhill, "Land of the Lamas," p. 284, New York, 1891.)

The great value of pack-trains in military operations against the Apaches and other savage tribes in the Rocky Mountain region west of the Missouri has been recognized in "On the Border with Crook;" but were all notes and memoranda on the subject to be presented they would make a volume of themselves.

Even in personal characteristic, the Mexican _arriero_ is identical with his Hispano-Moresque prototype. Like him he indulges in simple ballads and songs of love, drawn out in a heart-rending nasalized prolongation.

"The Spanish _muleter_ has an inexhaustible stock of songs and ballads with which to beguile his interminable wayfaring. His airs are rude and simple, consisting of but few inflections. These he chants forth with a loud voice and long, dwelling cadence. This talent of singing and improvising is frequent in Spain, and is said to have been inherited from the Moors." Washington Irving, "Alhambra," pp. 16, 17, New York, 1865. Something might be said about the cooking in pack-trains a quarter of a century ago presenting quaint and highly spiced dishes, but only one reference can now be made to such matters. The packers habitually employed sour dough as a leaven. This method, described in a little pamphlet the manuscript for which was submitted to and published by Brigadier-General John P. Hawkins, lately Commissary-General U. S. Army,

As illustrative of the tenacity of life shown by the ballads of a people, read what is said by Mr. Alfred M. Williams about American sea-ballads: "They are likely to be lost with the chants of the Phoenician sailors, or the rowers of the galleys of Ulysses, which they succeeded and some of whose melody they have perhaps reproduced." _Studies in Folk-Lore and Popular Poetry_, p. 19, Boston, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1894.

Language and Folk-Usage of the Rio Grande Valley. is Spanish, perhaps Moorish, in origin. It is noted by only one author, C. Bogue Lauffmann, as seen by him in Spain. ("A Vagabond in Spain," p. 237, New York, Scribners, 1895.)

BULL-FIGHTS.

Beyond a mere statement of the fact that the bull-fight is a well-established form of public entertainment in the cities of Mexico nearest to the valley of the Rio Grande, and that it adheres with fidelity to the model set in old Spain, nothing will be said in this paper. The subject is too vast. Contrary to the opinion maintained by most writers, that the bull-fight was of Arabic origin, there are grounds for believing that it was a Roman institution, taking on life in the days of imperial decadence, eagerly adopted and to a considerable extent modified by the Moors of Andalusia.

Should opportunity present, these views, with the authorities for and against them, will be elaborated in another article.

STREETS, LAMPS, WATCHMEN, BATHS.

From the house to the street is the most natural order of progression in treating of a people, their homes, manners, and customs. The streets of Mexican towns present strong resemblances to those of Arabic Spain and Morocco in being narrow and hemmed in by houses with sagnanes, iron-railed windows, projecting balconies, and walled _patios_. There is no general rule as regards paving, some streets in the town being _empeados_ (cobbled-stone), some paved with the Arabic guijas, or gravel, others unpaved; in some there is a gutter in the middle, in others there are gutters on each side. Generally there are very narrow footways on one or both sides; their presence cannot always be depended upon. Where muddy seasons are to be expected, as in Puebco, near the Hotel Ybarra, a line of elevated foot-stones runs down the centre. If the promenade be made by night, one meets at every second or third corner the _sereno_, or watchman, who derives his name from the cry he was wont to give until very recently of _sere-o-no-o-o_ (clear weather). He is a son

---

1 There is another side to the story: "Bull-fights appear to have been a favorite amusement from the earliest time in the Spanish peninsula. It is evident that this custom existed before the Romans entered Spain, for it is represented upon ancient medals of a period earlier than their arrival." Edward Everett Hale and Susan Hale, _The Story of Spain_, p. 8, New York, Putnams, 1886.

---

As illustrative of the tenacity of life shown by the ballads of a people, read what is said by Mr. Alfred M. Williams about American sea-ballads: "They are likely to be lost with the chants of the Phoenician sailors, or the rowers of the galleys of Ulysses, which they succeeded and some of whose melody they have perhaps reproduced." _Studies in Folk-Lore and Popular Poetry_, p. 19, Boston, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1894.
of Islam on the wrong side of the Atlantic. The Arab emirs had watchmen in all their villages. They are directly mentioned in Granada as early as A. D. 1343. (Condé, vol. iii. p. 267.) London and Paris did not have any at that date.1

Coppée states that under Arab rule in Spain watchmen with lanterns patrolled the cities at night, calling from hour to hour, Alláh il Alláh. (“Conq. Spain by the Arab-Moors,” vol. ii. p. 326.) These cries were naturally superseded in Spain and her colonies by Ave María Purísima, which in its turn gave way to the shrill drone of the reed whistle to be heard in our day.

The electric light is playing havoc with much of the poetry of Mexican evening life, in which the old-time oil-lamp, suspended from wires crossing diagonally from corner to corner, was a conspicuous feature.

For this, also, Mexico was indebted to the Moors. The streets of Arabic Cordova “might be traversed at night by the light of lamps placed close to each other.” (Coppée, vol. ii. p. 306.) This was about A. D. 1100, when neither London nor Paris were lighted. No systematic attempt was made to light the city of London until after the plague and the great fire, and even until the days of the French Revolution “link-boys” stood ready to escort carriages and pedestrians home through dingy, badly-paved alleys.

Were it not for this fine regulative system derived from the Arabs, we might be in danger of assault from gangs of ruffians (garillas) and assassines (asesinos), who would at least make a great tumult or alboroto in the street.

CLOCKS AND WATCHES.

The world has benefited beyond calculation by the Arabic invention of these articles. It might almost be said that a revolution was brought about in social economy. One of the Roman pontiffs, Gerbert, who assumed the tiara under the name of Sylvester II., was a student at Cordova before the year 1000, and there learned the art of making watches, an accomplishment which placed him under suspicion of witchcraft.

The clocks and watches to be seen in Mexico in this generation are not from Morocco or Cordova, but from Massachusetts and Connecticut, localities which manufacture more of them in a month than were made under the Caliphate in one hundred years. The

1 The cry of the mueddins (of Tangier) is precisely like that of the Spanish tereras, who must have learned it, as they did so many other things, from the Moors—a long chant on one note, sometimes shortened, sometimes prolonged. Margaret Thompson, A Stranger through Spain and Tangier, p. 256, New York, Dodd, Mead & Co., 1892.

Language and Folk-Usage of the Rio Grande Valley.

arched market-places, the little stands heaped high with fruits and vegetables and guarded by crouching figures wrapped in rebosos and serapes, which distinguish the towns of Mexico might be inserted as pictures to illustrate volumes of travel in Northern Africa or the Levant.

And the book-venders who in those markets repeat aloud an outline of the plot of the dog-eared books and pamphlets they have to sell, are they not the improvisatori of Cordova, Seville, and Toledo, of whom we all have read so much?

And this party of professional serenaders, wandering from zaguan to zaguan, droning amatory ditties, and bearing the emblem of a ship ablaze with light, do they not replace the gay troubadours of Granada?

THE CUSTOM OF “PELON.”

The stores, especially in the smaller towns, are Oriental in the hyperbole of their titles and the tenuity of their stocks. They are generally small and contracted and much behind the times. A very curious custom, that of pelon, obtains, by which after a certain amount of purchase the buyer receives a rebate or gratuity, either in money or goods. The word pelon means a stone or weight of some kind used to balance the crude scales in the country parts of Spain. The custom of pelon as it exists along the Rio Grande is analogous to that of l'agnitappe in Louisiana.

BAKERS.

The bakeries of Mexico are entitled to the grateful remembrance of every traveller, and the bread is of the best. The wheat is ground between stones in tiny mills whose wheels are turned by the water of acequias, much as in Andalusia and Murcia the grist was made ready for the Almanzors and Abdelmelics of centuries past.

The Arabian fashion of selling bread from trays carried through the streets of Jerusalem and other cities (see Gilmn, “Story of the Saracens,” p. 435, New York, 1887) is paralleled in most of the Mexican villages, and there is rather more than an accidental resemblance between the street cries of this part of the New World and those of the land of the Moslem. “In the name of the Prophet! Figs,” is a cry no longer heard by Christian ears, and which has fallen back before the ear-piercing “Algo de fruta! Algo de dulce!” of the itinant candy and fruit peddlers of Monclova, Celaya, Morelia, Queretaro, Laredo, and elsewhere.

The caldero, or wandering mender of brass pans and kettles, is another type of street-industry which may have come to Mexico from Cordova or Bagdad.
BARBER-SHOPS.

The pelqueras or barber-shops of the larger towns recall, in their neatness and good taste, the care bestowed by Arabs upon hair and beard.

BATHS.

No Mexican municipality which can possibly provide baths for the people neglects that solemn duty. In many of the smaller towns, these are noticeably fine and well arranged. There is an absence of unnecessary ornamentation, but no material comfort is forgotten.

The baths are not free, the price being two cents for poor people, ranging from that up to dos reales, or twenty-five cents for the more affluent. For the smallest figure, one gets nothing but an abundance of clean, cold (or hot) water, and the tank to bathe in; for dos reales there are attendants at hand with towels, soap, brushes, mirrors, and anything else that may be needed; economy in varying degrees may be consulted in the intermediate prices.

San Miguel de Allende is perhaps as good a specimen of what a Mexican bath-house should be as can be found within the republic.

The attendants are very strict in preserving order and in seeing that each bather is provided with his own key and tank. One half the building is reserved for men, the other for women.

Not a drop of water is wasted. After leaving the bath-houses, it runs down the side of the hill into a line of stone troughs, alongside which patient lavanderos are washing clothes from morning until night; from the laundresses it runs down into larger pools, where the casinacos or sheep shearers and dyers are soaping sheep, great hanks of woollen yarn, and piles of blankets. Farther down, it is contained in an acequia deeply shaded by orange, lemon, banana, pecan, pomegranate, rose, willow, and oleander; next it courses through one of the streets, to keep it refreshed and free from dust, and finally meanders across the prolific fields beyond the town.

That the Mexican has derived his bath from the Roman, language tells most plainly. Everything connected with the bath is designated by a Latin derivative. The Arabs found the bath most highly developed in Syria, Palestine, North Africa, and Spain, and quietly adopted it. They became as passionately addicted to its use as Romans and Greeks had been, and in their earliest chronicles accuse their Christian enemies of an indifference to its benefits. "It is related of these people of Galicia, who are all Christians, that they are the bravest of all the land of France, but they live like savages or wild beasts; they never wash their persons or their garments, nor do they change the latter until they fall in pieces from their limbs, a mere heap of rags and tatters." (Condé, "Dom. Arabs in Spain," vol. i. p. 203, quoting an Arabic authority, temp. Abdurrahman I., circa 800 A. D.)

The observation of the Mahomedans at that epoch had probably been restricted to war parties of Christians, poorly provided, in the Asturian Mountains; in the course of several centuries it is related that the Moorish king, Ismail of Granada, A. D. 1316, "commanded that the Christians should wear marks on their clothing whereby they might be distinguished from the Moslemah, and laid on them an impost for their dwellings and baths which they had not previously paid." (Condé, iii. p. 226.)

Coppee unfairly accuses the Spaniards of destroying the baths of the Moors, because the religion of the Spaniards was largely a religion of personal uncleanness. This matter is rather too delicate for discussion here, but certainly the monks of Spain were no more untidy than the fakirs and morabith of the Arab-Moor. Some other reason must be assigned for their suppression. They naturally would become and undoubtedly were places of political assignation, and the following from Stirling-Maxwell bears out this conclusion. In 1518, this eminent author says, "The Moriscoes were commanded to lay aside their ancient language and customs: to speak Castilian and dress like Spaniards; to give up bathing and destroy their baths; to keep the doors of their houses open on Saturdays and feast days; to renounce their national songs, dances, and marriage ceremonies; to lay down their Arabic names, and to entertain among them no Moors from Barbary, whether slaves or freemen." (Stirling-Maxwell, "Life of Don John of Austria," vol. i. pp. 118, 119.) He also says that they constantly entertained pirates from Barbary and aided them in assaults upon Christian commerce. The dress of the pirates of Barbary being exactly the same as that of the Moors, it was difficult to detect them, and many Christians were kidnapped.

Having said that the Moor found the bath much as the Roman left it, it is easy to show that through the Spaniard he bequeathed it to the Mexican with little if any change, as suggested by language.

AMUSEMENTS.

What are the amusements, diversions, entertainments, religious or secular, of the Mexicans? What great religious festivals are observed at the mutations of the seasons? By observing closely 1 Speaking of the Russian moujiks, Edna Dean Proctor says that their clothes "are worn without washing, night and day for months, and perhaps years, until they become rags and are exchanged for new." A Russian Journey, p. 52, Boston, Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

such matters, in which mankind is most eminently conservative, would it not be possible to pick up here and there a shred of some long-forbidden wardrobe? The task is at least worth the effort. An examination should be made into those amusements which are public and those entertainments which are more restricted in character, such as christenings, weddings, funerals, balls, and all functions which for any reason draw together the friends of a family.
The Mexican is endowed with a great fund of good common-sense.
He does not believe in the cheerless existence of his Yankee brother who works himself to death or decrepitude before he is forty, and he will not follow such an example. Therefore, as a matter of duty, he devotes a portion of his life to rational enjoyment, and as a consequence neurasthenia is a disease unknown in Mexico, and one whose character it would be difficult to make a Mexican understand.
Scarce a town in the republic is so poor or so small that it has not its alameda or its public garden, with its winding paths or rambles (rambla, Arabic), in which twice a week one can listen to fairly good music, and witness the promenade of sedate men who march leisurely, arm in arm, two by two, in one direction, while señoras and señoritas, equally sedate, march with equal leisure in the opposite.
Once a week there is a performance, generally by local talent, in the teatro. The Mexican theatre, or the Spanish theatre, its parent, is a subject too vast for any such treatment as can be given here.
The prologue to a Spanish drama is called the loa, a word meaning praise or eulogy. This refers to the flattering phrases addressed by the leading actor, in minor affairs by the clown, who is known by the name of payaso, to the audience. It is a sine qua non in the Mexican rustic representations.
In Burgos in Spain “the prompter is protected by a sort of tin shell arched like the roof of an oven, to protect him against the patatas, manzanas, and edcarnas de naranja, potatoes, apples, and orange­ peel, with which the Spanish public — as impatient a public as ever existed — never fails to bombard those actors who displease them.
... The actors did not know a word of their parts, and the prompter spoke so loudly that he completely drowned their voices.” (Théophile word of the above applies to the Rio Grande. The miracle-play, still maintained in Mexico, has been mentioned in a previous paper.
Other public diversions of the Mexican frontier are narronas, or tight-rope walking, with acrobatic feats, matachines, harlequins, and tilteros, or puppet-shows. They are too much like exhibitions of the same kind in other parts of the world to need description.

Language and Folk-Usage of the Rio Grande Valley.

GAMBLING.

The Mexican, of whatever degree, has a natural fondness for gambling. All the elements which united to form the Mexican social structure, — American Indian, Arab, or Teuton, — were addicted to the same vice. The favorite games are monte, con quinc, roulette, chinas, keno, chess, dominoes, and some others.
For the monte game, the terms employed do not appear to be Latin.
Thus the cards themselves are called naipes, to shuffle is barajar, the knife is sota, the ace is as, and to cut is ace. Ajedrez, chess, is an Arabic word. “King Hixem played, as usual, his game of chess.”
(Condé, vol. i. pp. 239, 276.)

No Mexican house on the Rio Grande is complete without its oráculo or dream-book, and the women are as devoted to chiromancy or palmistry as the Arabs were in Cordova. (See Coppée, vol. ii. p.
442.) The fourth council of Toledo (A. D. 633) punished with deposition any priest who consulted soothsayers. “Que sea depuesto de su honor el eclesiástico que consulte á ahorros ó supersticiosos.”

CORRER EL GALLO.

Chicken fighting is freely indulged in by the Mexicans, as it was by the Arabs, but it was probably played by Romans and Carthagina­ sians in Spain long before the Arabs landed; therefore no much stress need be laid upon its existence. The Romans caused to fight both chickens and quails.
There is another form of diversion with fowl which must, however, be mentioned, although it too, in one shape or another, has spread over much of the surface of the earth, and that is the great sport of correr el gallo, or “running the rooster,” which strictly speaking is more frequently an old hen. The victim selected is buried up to its neck in sand, and then horsemen dash at full speed up to the chicken, lean out from the saddle and try to grasp it.
There are many failures, involving ludicrous mishaps and perilous battles, but finally some rider, bolder or more dextrous than his comrades, seizes the hen by the neck and gallops down the valley, followed by all the other contestants. The hen is usually torn to pieces in the struggle. This was the method observed at the Indian pueblo of Santo Domingo, New Mexico, in the month of August, after harvest, in 1881. (“Snake-Dance of the Moquis,” Bourke, London and New York, 1884.)

In the lower Rio Grande, on St. John’s Day (June), the young men engage in correr el gallo, but instead of a living bird make use of an image of paper, ribbon, and feathers. In both cases the riding is superb, and there are not a few accidents.1

BAILES AND TERTULIAS.

When a dancing party is decided upon in a Mexican village, the affair takes shape by a sort of spontaneous generation. The young men display an activity not usual with them and busy themselves in putting the selected room to rights. There is not very much to be done, and yet there is always something. The musicians must be notified, the earthen floor must be wet down, tallow candles are clone, and yet there is always something. The musicians must be require dusting, rawhide-seated chairs are.

need ed in the tin sconces attached to the walls, the saints' pictures putting the selected room to rights. There is not very much to be affair takes shape by a sort of spontaneous generation. The young men display an activity not usual with them and busy themselves in three from this neighbor and two and three from that, and then everybody has to be invited. In the really good old times, this was done by a preganer, or cric, who bawled the welcome notice through the streets; later on, when society began to divide up into classes, the select few were called upon by some of the self-appointed comnittee of young men having the funcio in charge; but in these days of degeneracy there are few villages along the border which do not aspire to printed forms of invitation. But the Mexican baile is not what it used to be twenty-five or thirty years ago. Board floors and kerosene-lamps, cottage-organs, ready-made gowns, and hand-me-down suits have wrought destruction upon its erewhile beauties and knocked all the poetry out of it.

The dancing would begin very soon after dark and last until all hours of the next morning. The young ladies were not escorted from their homes by gentlemen, but came under the guardianship of aged female relatives or attendants, called dueñas, and the older, uglier, and more crabbed a dueña happened to be the more highly was her efficiency regarded. The dueña possibly was known to the Romans; she certainly was known to the Arab-Moors in Spain, who allowed their women a freedom entirely distinct from the seclusion enforced in other sections of the Mahomedan world.

With the arrival of the young men the fun began. Scarcely had a gallant put his foot across the threshold before some young lady would assail him with a cascarron. To make the cascarron (lit. eggshells) an egg is carefully blown of its meat and then filled with cologne, or essence of musk, or finely chopped gold and silver tissue paper. The aperture is then sealed up, the egg-shell decorated, and the cascarron is ready for business. A lady takes one and approaching a cavalier breaks it on his head, rubbing the pieces well into his hair. The etiquette of the border requires the swain to provide himself with a cascarron (there is a table loaded with them in one corner), and to return the compliment in kind, being careful not to rub the fragments too deep into the lady's tresses, as they are not easy to get out. Then he is expected to lead her out upon the floor and dance with her. The dance ended, he escorts her to a table upon which are refreshments of different kinds, syrups, and dulces. The señorita very generally helps herself to a portion of fruit, cakes, or pasas (raisins of the country), and puts it away in a large handkerchief to be carried home when the entertainment is over.

There may be many means of determining who has been the belle of some particular ball, but there has never been a surer indication than the size of the bundle the Rio Grande girl had to carry home a generation ago.

In England, as late as 1677, it was the custom for guests at chrin-tenings to carry home what they could not eat. (See Brand, "Pop.
Antig.," vol. ii. p. 80, article "Christening," London, 1872.)

The origin of the cascarron is obscure; in the light of evidence now available it would be going too far to say that it was Arabic, and yet only in that direction can any trace of its paternity be found.

At the marriage of Molmun, son of Haroun al Raschid, which occurred at Wasit, a suburb of Bagdad, about 825 A. D., we read that "balls of amber or musk were thrown among the attendant throns.
... Coins of gold and silver, and eggs of amber were also lavishly cast about to be picked up by whoever would." (Arthur Gilman,
"The Story of the Saracens," p. 303, New York, 1887.)

The Mahomedans in Spain are reported to have had two, some say four festivals corresponding to Easter. There was certainly one, the Alifta, at close of the Ramazan, and another, that of the Victims.
"During both these solemnities, profane and worldly follies had been permitted to creep in — the people going about the streets like madmen, casting oranges and other fruits at each other, and every one besprinkling his neighbor with odorous waters." (Conde, "Dom. Arabs in Spain," vol. iii. p. 263.) These "disorders" were suppressed by Jusef in A. D. 1343.

There are no formal presentations at these Mexican parties because none are needed; each guest knows his neighbor. Considerable liberty of action is conceded, and all who so desire, men or women, smoke, and there is much gossip and abuse of the neighbors who are absent, and sometimes much carejada or noisy laughter (an Arabic word). Mexican courtesy attracts the respectful attention of every observer. It is not put on as a garment to be worn at 1 Correr el gallo seems to be the same, or of the same general nature, as the French jeu du canard, in which a duck, head downward, is suspended from a rope or a limb of a tree, and a blindfolded boy tries to cut off its head with a sabre.

See A Tour through the Pyrenees, Hyppolite Adolphe Taine, Fiske's translation, balls and on occasions of ceremony, but is ever present, and has become as it were a second nature. Mexicans, in meeting, embrace each other as the Moors and Arabs do. The proudest gentleman in the land will take off his hat to return the salutation of the beggar who begs a light for his cigarrillo, or will beg his pardon in the name of God when declining his supplication for charity.

CHRISTENINGS.

The Mexican comadre or gossip appears to the best advantage when a new baby is to be admitted into the fold of the church. The party having returned from the sanctuary, the house is thrown open to friends, there are music, conversation, and dancing, with refreshments to which all are made welcome, even the beggars on the streets.

Condé remarks that hacer buenas fadas was the phrase used to express the festival always held on giving a child its name, which was done on the eighth day after its birth. . . . "A part of the food prepared for the occasion was then given to the poor." (Condé, "Dom. Aribas in Spain," vol. i. p. 478.)

It should be borne in mind that name-days not birth-days, are celebrated along the Rio Grande; invitations are extended for celebrations on the day of the saint whose name is borne by the host; and thus it often happens that on the same evening one may have the opportunity to enjoy the hospitality of several Juans, Anitas, or Guadalupes, as the case may be. The greatest term of endearment that can be given to a neighbor is tocallo, namesake. When the infant son of Abdur-r-rhaman I, received the name of Hixem, "that auspicious event was celebrated with many rejoicings, the king Abdur-r-rhaman dispensing alms very liberally and giving food to the poor in abundance." (Condé, vol. i. p. 182.)

COURTSHIP AND MARRIAGE.

Of the customs connected with courtship and weddings among the Mexicans much of a most interesting nature might be written. In an outline description of this nature nothing more than a reference to salient features is permissible. The relations between the sexes being under strict surveillance among the Mexicans, young men and women have not the same opportunities for becoming acquainted as have been found of advantage in the United States.

A joven who feels the first impulses of the tender passion has few if any opportunities for meeting the object of his affections alone, much less of conversing with her save in the presence of parent or grim delanta.

He may dance with her at parties, speak to her at christening, kneel near her at mass or vespers, perhaps enjoy the bliss of sprinkling her with holy water, but his chief pleasure or his chief misery, as one may choose to regard such matters, is to be found in "playing the bear" (jugando el oso, or oseando, as the term goes). The unfortunate young man takes station close to the lattice of the young señorita, and there remains until by accident she approaches and looks down upon him, and by accident drops a flower or a handkerchief,—accidents of this kind are constantly happening in the best Mexican families,—and then, animated by hope, he may venture to send some female relative to sound the girl's parents as to their disposition.

Among the rural Mexicans who adhere most obstinately to old usages, a betrothal is an affair of some formality. The aspirant makes evident the sincerity of his declaration by the tender of the dones, presents of some value, generally jewelry, which, if accepted, give him the right to walk with the young lady and her family to church and places of entertainment.

As the wedding day approaches, he buys the trousseau for the bride. This custom is now dying out in all but the remote Mexican districts, yet it is still noted in Cuba.

The parents of the bride generally provide a dowry and arrange a wedding-feast which is as elaborate and bountiful as their means will permit, and liquor in abundance may always be looked for. The entertainment is most frequently held out of doors, the climate favoring such a course, but the wedding itself, when possible, must be held in the church. At the words in the ritual, "with all my worldly goods," the bridegroom casts thirteen pieces of money upon a plate held by one of the officiating priest's assistants. This money is blessed by the celebrant, and restored to the donor, who replaces it with its equivalent in coin of the realm and has the original pieces made into a pulsera or bracelet for his bride. This custom, known as the arras, is explained by local wiseacres to represent our Saviour and the twelve apostles, but what our Saviour and the twelve apostles, including Judas, have to do with a Mexican wedding would be hard to say.

On the contrary, the ceremony is a Moorish one, and the name arras itself is Moorish, given by Eguzlaz Y Yanguras in "Glosario," with a definition sustaining the above description.

At a very elegant wedding in Laredo, Texas, the bride sent for all the gentlemen present and graciously conferred upon each one a rosebud from the bouquet which she had carried to the altar.

At another, in Saltillo, although the bridal couple and their immediate attendants returned home in carriages, the spectators streamed in procession on foot to the bride's house, where they were met by an orchestra, and in a few minutes afterwards by a procession of servants bearing platters in each of which was a roasted chicken or duck, whose head had been replaced and gilded with an effect decidedly barbaric and magnificent.

To compare all the above with Arabic or Moorish ceremonial extracts can be taken from excellent authorities; thus, Condé says that at the marriage of Abdelmelec and Habiba, A. D. 989, "the wedding festival was held in the beautiful gardens of the Almuni." ("Dom. Arabs in Spain," vol. ii. p. 13.)

A recent writer in "All the Year Round," describing a wedding among the Kabyles of North Africa, has this to tell. The bride is led to the bridegroom to the accompaniment of more tambour music. He opens the door, takes her by the hand, makes her sit by him on the cushions, after which he lifts her veil, and for the first time looks upon his wife's face. The lady says not a word to her husband until next day he has made her a present, either of jewelry or gold pieces. The next day there is a great deal of fritter-making in the new establishment, for distribution among the various friends and relatives on both sides."

The writer in commenting upon his own description adds: "Here it is the girl's father who acts a wedding portion."

Thus far there has been demonstrated a surprising similarity in the existence of customs like the arras, wedding festivities out of doors, and the eating of fritters corresponding to the burmelos mentioned in foregoing pages. Among the "Arabs the marriage contract might be only verbal; but the better classes confirmed it before the kadi, and for them the ceremonies of betrothal and espousal were elaborate and splendid." (Coppée, "Hist. Conq. Spain," vol. ii. p. 331.)

That wine flowed as freely at the weddings of the Arab-Moors in Spain as it does in those of the wealthy Mexicans of to-day is beyond question.

That curious system, "marriage by capture," prevailed in almost all primitive society, as may be learned by an examination of McLennan's "Primitive Marriage." It certainly prevailed among the Arabs of early times. Gilman says that "the ferocious custom of burying female offspring alive as soon as born was followed, either as considering women not worth bringing up, or from an exaggerated sense of honor, as though fearing that the helpless ones might some day be carried off by an enemy." (Arthur Gilman, "The Story of the Saracens," p. 63, New York, Putnams, 1887), while Condé, describing the marriage of Abdelmelec and Habiba, refers to "the feigned defence made by the damsel" composing the retinue of the bride. ("Dom. Arabs in Spain," vol. ii. p. 13.) He also speaks of the "delightful music which sounded through the night." (Idem, vol. ii. p. 13.)

A suggestion of this form of wife-capture could be found among the Mexicans less than a generation ago, in the city of Tucson, Arizona.

On Saint John's Day, or more strictly on the night of that day, the young bucks of the city and vicinity, dressed in their best, and mounted upon prancing plugs gayly caparisoned, rode up to the doors of their dulcines, where those blushing señoritas in their finest raiment awaited the great honor of being lifted up on the pommel of the saddle, where, firmly encircled by one stout arm of their cavaliers, they enjoyed the eagerly sought privilege conceded for that occasion only of riding up and down the streets unattended in the company of a man.

As it happened, there were not enough girls or not enough horses to go around, and some of the gay cavaliers had to enjoy themselves as best they might on foot, and this they did by throwing firecrackers at the horses of their luckier rivals as the latter, holding their gentle burdens, cantered up and down the streets. Why there were no necks or limbs broken will always remain one of those mysteries for which no solution can be offered.

This knowledge of and love for fireworks and illuminations was duly transmitted to Mexico and the Mexicans, and may be seen reflected in the civic and religious celebrations of all the cities and towns from the Rio Nueces to Tchuantepec.

Still another observance connected with St. John's Day on the lower Rio Grande is that of taking a bath in the stream and putting on new clothes. Here is something closely akin to the ceremonial ablutions enjoined by the Prophet upon his followers.

MORTUARY CEREMONIES.

When little children died among the Mexicans, the body neatly dressed in white, with a helmet of gilt paper, or else with a garland of artificial flowers, was laid upon a board, or upon a temporary bier, and borne to the church and thence to the grave by surviving comrades, preceded by musicians playing waltzes or soft, sad music.

Grown people were buried in much the same manner. The corpse was not preceded by music, but it was laid upon a rude bier, clad in its best apparel. Wood was extremely dear, and coffins were within reach of only the very wealthy. The object seemed to be so to hurry matters that the remains might be interred within less than twenty-four hours after deceso. The male mourners, wearing above their elbows tiny bows of black crape, marched two and two, each bearing a candle which was lit as the procession entered the church.
women, also two by two, and bearing candles, followed after the men, but their candles remained unlit. The evening after the funeral they would meet in some designated house, light their candles, and talk about the defunct and his virtues until the candles burned away. On ranches at a distance from towns, rockets were sent up, to warn the neighbors that the funeral was about to start, to ward off evil influences, or for both purposes.

These mortuary ceremonies of the Mexicans, with only slight allowance for time and distance, are found among the Moors to-day. Speaking of the Moors of Tangiers, Miss Margaret Thompson says: "They carry their dead to the grave with a triumphant march, chanting all the way a joyous air. The bodies are buried without coffins, wrapped in linen." ("A Scamper through Spain and Tangiers," p. 265, New York, 1892.)

Condé, when treating of the funerals of the Arabs in the first centuries after their arrival in Spain, never mentions coffins, but always speaks of the dead being carried on biers. The Spanish word for coffin is the Arabic ata'id, but that meant the plank on which the corpse was carried. When he speaks of Christian funerals he always mentions coffins. After the Moors had mingled with their former foemen, and become their vassals, references will be found to their use of coffins and caskets.

CUSTOMS IN CHURCHES.

Upon first entering a Mexican church, an American accustomed to the comfortably, gayly dressed congregations of women of his own section will be impressed by the absence of pews or scats of any kind, and by the numbers of women who, closely wrapped in black rebozos or tapales, kneel on the floor of earth and cough incessantly during the service.

This uniform method of covering the heads and shoulders is Moorish: "No maiden went to a mosque where there was not a place set apart for the virgins; and every woman was carefully wrapped up and covered with her veil." (Condé, "Dom. Arabs in Spain," vol. ii. p. 3, footnote.)

This custom became a matter of obligation under King Juzef, who in A. D. 1343, ordered that when women entered mosques "all were to be carefully veiled." (Condé, vol. iii. p. 262.) To enter a church unveiled signified, during Moorish times, that a woman was a Christian. Such an act led to the detection of two young Moorish girls, Sabagotha and Liliosa, who had secretly become Christians (A. D. 852). (Padre Florez, "España Sagrada," vol. x. p. 381.)

"The men very frequently, when impelled by an excess of devotion, will pray stretched at full length, or bent low to the floor, or with arms extended in form of a cross. This method of "prayer with prostrations" is mentioned by Condé, vol. ii. p. 63, and again in vol. iii. p. 272, where he calls it anata. At the doors of Mexican churches, in the republic of Mexico itself, are still to be found vendors of wax tapers and small candles which are purchased by the pious and burned in front of the altars, sometimes held by the devout supplicant, sometimes placed upon the altar itself.

This practice was prevalent in Moorish Spain, when we read of a youth "whose father was a lamplighter, or burner of tapers at the shrines of saints in the great Aljama." 1 (Coppee, "History of the Conq. of Spain by the Arab-Moors," vol. ii. p. 220.) As is well known, there is sacred dancing in the Cathedral of Seville, tolerated by the Papal authorities, on the feasts of the Immaculate Conception, Corpus Christi, and the last three days of the carnival. The ten dancers wear costumes of the time of Philip II., and move to the sound of castanets. In the time of Philip II., the Moors were still a potent social element in and around Seville, the castanet was a Moorish instrument of music, or at least they inherited it from Carthaginians and Romans, and the feasts mentioned were as much Moorish as they were Christian.

No dancing is held in any other church in Europe, Catholic or Protestant, or in any in America, so far as known, excepting in that of Madalefia, Sonora, Mexico, where as late as 1873 the Yagui Indians, then at peace with the Mexicans, executed a stately dance to the music of rattles on the feast-day of Saint Francis of Assisi, October 4. Dancing in churches was prohibited by third Council of Toledo (A. D. 509). "Que en las fiestas no se permitiesen danzas ni cantares tores." (Padre Florez, "España Sagrada," vol. vi. p. 144.)

ALMSGIVING, FASTING, PILGRIMAGES, ABLUTIONS.

"Prayer, fasting, and alms are the religious duties of a Musulman," according to Gibbon, in "Decline and Fall," chap. 50. To these he adds pilgrimages and ceremonial ablutions.

Condé tells the same story. Mahomed "commended the use of certain practices of ablation and purification, enjoining likewise daily prayers, almsgiving, and religious pilgrimages to the temple of Alharem." (Condé, vol. i. p. 34.) Had the same ordinances been given direct to the Mexicans, they could not be observed more strictly than they are at the present day. Of prayer enough has been said.

1 Padre Florez mentions a Moorish prince, an ambassador to Queen Urraca, who knelt at the shrine of St. James of Compostella, with a wax taper (cirio) in hand to implore a cure for a tumor in his chest (A. D. 1122). (España Sagrada, vol. xix. p. 277.)
Of ceremonial ablutions it has been intimated that the annual lustration of the Mexicans in the Rio Grande on St. John's Day might be regarded as having such a character. Pilgrimages in Mexico are made with frequency to such shrines as Madaleña, the chorro, which is an old pagan place of worship, to Guadalupe, outside of the city of Mexico, where the Aztecs in prehistoric ages adored their goddess Tepcayac, to Agualeguas and many others.

To all these cities and towns, and to all others, such as Tucson, when celebrating their saint's day, flock scores of petty merchants, peddlers, buyers, sellers, tramps, cripples and beggars, confident of a satisfaction derived from these gatherings during the years of the Spanish viceregal rule, and the custom would seem to have been inbred.

Alms were distributed by the Moslem on Fridays. (Condé, vol. ii. p. 134.) By the ordinances of King Juzef (A. D. 1243-1250) “the believers were enjoined to employ the leisure of that day (Friday) in visiting and relieving the poor.” (Condé, vol. iii. p. 262.)

Friday, as is well understood, was the Mahomedan Sabbath. The beggars of Mexico do not restrict their importunities to any one day, but impartially distribute their favors, and at church doors, or puestos of private mansions, from Monday morning until Saturday night, whine their dolorous appeals for “a little alms for the love of God.”

A Mexican may give in a number of different ways. There is the usual limosina or alms to beggars, the regalo or ordinary present, the recuerdo or souvenir, the dones (pl. of don), gift made to affianced wife, estrenar Christmas gift, albricias (Arabic), present made to bringer of glad tidings, agnirnaldis or New Year’s gift, a word which has been shown to be allied to the French agnivalnais and to embody the cry of the Celtic Druids at opening of the new year, and propina much like our philophaena.

PENITENTES.

It might be well to say a word about the penitentes, or contrite sinners, who only a few years ago publicly whipped and otherwise mortified themselves in the streets of every village along the Rio Grande and throughout the republic. They were of the very same class as the flagellantes of Spain, and grew out of the same morbid and atonic spirituality which had surrounded the Moorish santones with the halo of godliness.

In the church of St. Ginés, in Madrid, in “the bóveda or dark vault, . . . during Lent, flagellants whip themselves, the sexton furnishing the cats; some have nine tails and are really stained with blood. In the good old times of Philip IV. Spaniards whipped themselves publicly in the streets.” (Richard Ford, “Hand-Book of Spain,” p. 79, London, 1882.)

Similar scenes have been enacted very recently in the old temple of Atotonilco, and one of the disciplinas there employed is now in the United States National Museum, Washington, D. C., and every army officer who served on the Rio Grande a quarter of a century ago can recall many remarkable incidents transpiring during Holy Week. The power of the church has been exercised remorselessly and in most of the villages effectually to stamp out this survival of savagery and barbarism. But from time to time they are again heard of and described. Within a few months, “Harper's Weekly” has published Mr. D. J. Flynn’s illustrated description of those seen by him in Tucú, New Mexico, at the head of the Rio Grande, which region, it may be noted, is a hotbed of penitente-ism. Another recent and lifelike article upon the same subject is from the pen of Charles F. Lummis.

Madame Calderón de la Barca describes those seen by her in the city of Mexico ("Life in Mexico," pp. 213, 214, London, 1843), and Colonel John Hay, in his "Castilian Days," speaks of them as still existing in the outlying districts of Spain.¹

PHRASES AND CATCHWORDS.

From prayers in churches to prayers, ejaculations, and oaths in conversation is an easy transition. The most ordinary prayer of ¹ Flagellants.—M. l’Abbe Boisau, Docteur de la Sorbonne, in his Histoire des Flagellants, 2d. ed., Amsterdam, 1732, says that flagellation found no authority for its existence in either the Old or New Testament, or in Patristic teachings, unless as a punishment duly inflicted upon conviction for adultery, fornication, larceny, or such offences.

The early Christians observed with honor the recklessness with which the Romans best their slaves, and recoiled with disgust from the voluntary flagellations of the Lupercalla. From the time of St. Augustine, the lash was administered to heretics and criminals.

There was no voluntary flagellation among the anchorites of the East. About the year A. D. 1000, when the idea first began to take shape that the end of the world was approaching, flagellants began to appear, and in 1047 or 1056 they assumed an organization largely because their cause had been espoused by S. Peter Damien, although no less an authority than Bruno, the grim Carthusian, fought them with night and main.

These Flagellants were condemned by the Church, and almost suppressed, but with the outbreak of the plague in the thirteenth century there was a renaissance of this fanatical idiocy which perpetuated it until the agitation of the Reformation gave the ecclesiastical authorities more important matters to think about. The parliament of Paris formally interdicted the Flagellants in 1601. During the years of the plague, droves of Flagellants, numbering hundreds, marched through Germany, Italy, and France, halting but one night in each village, and scourging themselves three times a day.
Mexican life is one of Moorish origin, Ojaldé or Would to God! that is to say, Would to Allah! The original of this is said to have been: en selá allah, if God would. (G. König, Lat.-röm. Wort., 1891.)

Recognizing this as having been in its origin a prayer, and realizing that in the expressions, Ojaldé que sea! and Ojaldé que fuere! (Would to God it may be! and Would to God it might be!) it is constantly on the lips of Mexican men and women, it is not too much to assert that within the territorial limits of the United States to-day, in the ratio of population, more prayers ascend to the prophet of the Moslem than are offered to Jesus Christ.

This pious "God knows how that may be!" of the Arabic chroniclers is literally translated into the Mexican Dios solo sabe!

PROVERBS AND REFRAINS.

The dignified sedateness of Mexican conversation is spiced and enlivened by an Attic salt of bright, pungent, and philosophical refrains not a few of which seem to have a distinctly Moorish flavor, but a full treatment of this part of the subject would fill a volume by itself.

"But, besides the lexical tributes, we must include the forms of thought and modes of proverbial expression of which the Spanish is full and which are the vehicle of the wit and wisdom" of Don Quixote. The traveller in Spain, as he listens to the proverbs, in the mouth of every peasant, seems transplanted to the land and period of the Arabian Nights." (Coppée, "Hist. Conq. Spain," vol. ii. p. 344.)

SUPERSTITIONS.

An attempt at an outline description of the popular superstitions and folk-medicine of the Mexican population of the Rio Grande Valley was published about one year ago in the Journal of American Folk-Lore. At the present time nothing will be done beyond indicating wherein certain of those superstitions had their analogues among the Arab-Moors. Mahomed was a firm believer in the evil eye. (See Gilman, "Story of the Saracens," p. 166.)

During thunder-storms it was narrated that sand was thrown in the air to avert bad luck. At his first battle with the people of Medina, "the prophet (Mahomed) started from his throne, mounted his horse, and cast a handful of sand into the air." (Gibbon, "Decline and Fall," chap. 50. See also, "Medicine Men of the Apache," Bourke.)

The dread of the bruja or witch indicates the fear which the Arab had of the same class of malefactors.

The Mexican fear of cross-eyed or one-eyed men may embody a vague tradition of the conquest of Spain by Tariq el Tuerto (Tariq the one-eyed or twisted-eyed). Richard Ford mentions the Roman emperor Theodosius (a Spaniard by birth) and the great Moorish king Abdu-r-rahman as having also been tuerto.

King Juzef, in A.D. 1343, "forbade the circulation through the streets and markets of those who put up prayers for rain. . . . He commanded that when excess of drought or want of rain should appear to necessitate prayer, those who made that offering should go forth to the fields with much devotion and humility, entreatng pardon many times for their sins, and uttering the following words with sincerity and cordial devotion." (Here follows a long prayer which, with appropriate modifications, could be recited to-day in Taos or Rio Grande city. (See Condé, vol. iii. pp. 263, 264.)

"The last two suras of the Koran . . . are written out and worn as amulets or committed to memory and repeated as charms." (Gilman, "The Story of the Saracens," p. 167, New York, 1887.)

This is done every day on the Rio Grande, substituting verses from the Bible, or prayers to saints for the suras.

The Arabs have a superstition that "prosperity is with sorrel horses." Mishkat-el-Masabre II., quoted by Coppée, "Conq. of Spain by the Arab-Moors," vol. i. p. 8, Boston, Little, Brown & Co., 1881.

Compare this with this the Mexican refrán, —

Alazan tostado,
Antes tuerto que conado.

The toasted sorrel [horse]
Will fall dead before he'll tire.

TREATMENT OF THE SICK.

The Mexicans are pronounced fatalists; few Mahomedans could excel them in that direction. If one of a family of children be taken down with the smallpox, the mother will put the others to bed with it, and if they also be stricken will resignly murmur, "Dios lo quiere," God wills it. The Arab use of laskeesh (see "Alhaxix" and "Bango" in Egilhax Yungus, "Glosario") is paralleled by the Mexican use of the tovatchi, a plant also of the hemp family. Tovatchi, it is said, can make people crazy, and there are some Mexicans who affect to believe that the unfortunate Carlota was loco'ed by having it administered to her in coffee. Some confidence in the remedial powers of United States Army surgeons has been developed in the minds of educated Mexicans during the past generation, but the ignorant masses still consult the curanderas, who are ostensibly herbalists, but in reality deal in all sorts of charms and trash.

Mexicans of this class place more reliance upon pilgrimages, amulets, talismans, novenas, candles, and aids of this kind than in all the medicaments and all the physicians in the world.

MIRACLE WORKERS.

The Rio Grande is the land of the supernatural. The Mexican government has had its share of trouble in suppressing insurrections incited by religious enthusiasts. Only three years since, troops in solid battalions were sent to Tomasichi in the Sierra Madre on the line between Chihuahua and Sonora, to reduce to reason and obedience to law the untamed enthusiasts who rallied round a miracle-working “Santa Teresa.”

The “San Pedro” of the town of Olmos, whose therapeutic antics were alluded to in “The American Congo,” paid a visit to the highly refined and intellectual city of San Antonio, Texas, only last spring, and as the local papers stated was called upon by “thousands of people,” while “letters and telegrams began pouring in upon him from all quarters.”

Such prophets, semi-prophets, and inspired healers correspond closely to the Mahdis who since A. D. 685 have arisen periodically among the Moslems; have under the name of the almohades twice regenerated Spain, which was supposed to be growing lukewarm in the interests of Islam, and have within our own generation driven the English out of the Sudan. (See Condé, “Dom. Arabs in Spain,” vol. ii. p. 354; Gilman, “Story of the Saracens,” p. 414.)

LAWS AND REGULATIVE SYSTEM.

It is not to be expected that the regulative system of Mexico should preserve anything but the laws and decrees issuing from time to time from the Spanish crown direct, or intermediately through the viceroys.

The basis of this system should be sought for in the antique fueros in the “Siete Partidas,” and the recopilaciones, inspired by the humane sentiments in the last will of Isabella the Catholic. Nevertheless, some few relics exist which speak plainly of the presence and influence of the Arab-Moor.

For example, the presiding judge in little Mexican communities is still designated by the Arabic name of alcalde, and his executive officer is called in some places the alguazil, in others the xerife (both Arabic names), and a man entering the court might do so in his shirt sleeves, but if he kept on his spurs he became liable to punishment for contempt, a reminiscence of the Arab idea of the necessity of taking off the shoes before entering a holy place.

Irrigation being essentially an Arab-Moorish introduction into Spain, there should be found traces of its parentage in the nomenclature and rules governing it. And this is so. Not only are the great irrigating ditches known as acequias and zanjás (Arabic words), but the officer in charge is called the acequificador or zanjero, and is clothed with peculiar powers. Whenever the ditches break, his rule is supreme and overrides that of alcalde, priest, or doctor; he can impose corveles of labor upon the population and make everything bend to his will. In the distribution of the water, he gives first to the oldest settler, without regard to the position of his fields along the line of the ditch. When farms and pasturage are subdivided, the Mexican rule is to have this so done that each porción shall have free access to ditch or river, and on the Rio Grande there are such porciones, suitable principally for grazing, which are fifteen miles deep, with a frontage of one hundred varas or a little over 300 feet along the acequia madre.

Pecorage, or slavery for debt, has only within the present generation been abolished in Mexico and the Mexican parts of the United States. The Mexicanpeon was not a slave in the English interpretation of the term; he had many privileges and full protection in most of his rights; was always treated with kindness, and corresponded fully to the Arabic mauli mentioned by Coppée, “Hist. Spain,” vol. i. p. 63, and Stanley Lane-Poole, “Story of the Saracens,” p. 48.

COMMERC.

Among the Pueblo Indians of Arizona and New Mexico, the word for borax (used as a flux by their silversmiths) is tioca. This word came to them from the Moors through the Spaniards. It is a Thibetan word, and tiocal is still an article of Thibetan export. (W. W. Rockhill, “Land of the Lamas,” pp. 272 and 339, New York, 1891, footnote.) It was used by Arab silversmiths, according to Equilaz y Yanguas. These same Pueblo Indians learned the art of knitting from the Spaniards. The men do the knitting, just as they do in Spain and in Mahomedan countries to-day. In Leon, in Spain, “the men spin and the women delve.” (Richard Ford, Hand-Book of Spain,” vol. i. p. 201, London, 1882.)

Bayard Taylor saw Turkish men knitting in Phrygia, in Asia Minor. (“Lands of the Saracens,” p. 282, New York, Putnams, 1873.)

John G. Bourke.
A MIRACLE-PLAY IN THE WEST INDIES.

In St. Kitts the negro population make a prolonged holiday of the week beginning with Christmas eve and ending on New Year's night. Every day from morning until sunset they parade the streets with music, masque, and grotesque costumes. Among the performers were men dressed as women, who stalked about on high stilts, and at times turned in a waltz, with great ease and agility, and untiring energy. There were performers dressed as Indians with feathered and horn headdresses, tomahawk, and leggings, who pranced about in wild caperings in imitation of a war-dance. Others were dressed as British sailors, who twined ribbons about a portable May-pole, and there was a group of minstrels, consisting of one man and two women, who sang the old-time Christy songs to the music of a guitar and tambourines. And all these were perpetually in movement, hopping, dancing, and gyrating to the monotonous beat of the tambourine and the tinkle of the triangle. From morning until night they apparently never ceased, and were as untiring at the close of the day as at the beginning. They were followed by a streaming crowd wherever they went, and whenever they paused a circle gathered around them, apparently less to watch the performance than to dance to the music. The whole negro population seemed to be bitten by the tarantula. The little pickanninies hopped about in the gutter in perfect imitation of the motion of their elders, and the negro women of all ages bobbed and swung with indefatigable activity and enjoyment. A woman passing along with a burden on her head would pause to have a dance, and caper vigorously without disturbing the equilibrium of her load. One old woman with simian features and skinny limbs seemed possessed with an almost St. Vitus frenzy. Her beady eyes sparkled and she danced until she finally stiffened into a sort of cataleptic rigor. The performances are called "moka jumbic" dances, and probably had their remote origin in the forests of Africa, but the masques, songs, and miracle-plays have all been created under the influence of English education and a more or less African travesty of the Christian religion.

One of the most elaborate performances was a representation of the combat between David and Goliath. The two armies of Israel and Philistia were represented by about a dozen warriors each, armed with as great a variety of weapons and clad in as remarkable costume as the force which besieged the castle of Thundertentrock. There were some with tin gorgets in imitation of ancient armor, and with wooden tridents and spears for weapons, and others with cocked hats of portentous size and wooden guns, and still others with tur-