Biographical / Historical

The Oakland Community College Learning Resource Centers, known also as the College Libraries, can be found on each of the five campuses. From the inception of the College in 1964, the LRCs were central to its initial vision. They were charged to supply information to those who needed it, in any medium, to any location. Mirroring the establishment of the individual campuses, the Auburn Hills and Highland Lakes LRCs came first in 1965, followed by Orchard Ridge in 1967, and the Southeast Campus System in Oak Park and Royal Oak in 1973.

As the College grew and each campus became more established, temporary buildings gave way to newly renovated structures that were better equipped to handle the burgeoning student population. Construction of building K on the Orchard Ridge Campus was completed in the Fall of 1968 allowing the LRC to move from its temporary location into its new home. The library was dedicated in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on October 6, 1968. In August of 1970, phase one of new construction at the Highland Lakes Campus was completed which included space for their new library, and in 1977 Auburn Hills followed with a new library dedicated in honor of one of OCC's Founders, George R. Mosher. The 1980s brought change in what was the Southeast Campus System. In 1980, the new Southfield Campus was established and two years later the new Royal Oak Campus opened in 1982.

The 1980s also saw a rejuvenation of the College's LRCs. Under the direction of OCC's fourth President Dr. R. Stephen Nicholson the LRCs formed a library task force committee. Together they impressed upon the Board of Trustees the real need to overhaul the LRCs and modernize the library system. When the college was established, its library records were recorded in machine-readable form in keeping with the initial forward-looking institutional commitment to automation. In 1987, the LRCs had updated automated cataloging systems, public access to the catalog, and circulation. As of 2018, the Oakland Community College Libraries have more than 240,000 volumes, 36,000 digital books, as well as thousands of periodicals, databases, and offers virtual reference twenty-four hours a day.
