AN OLD RESIDENT GONE.

Marshall, June 22.—Mr. Jas. Taylor, head miller at the Hurd steam mills, died suddenly from heart disease last Sunday morning. Mr. Taylor was born a slave near Louisville, Ky., and was so faithful to his duties and valuable as a mill hand that his master refused many tempting offers to sell him. In his youth Mr. Taylor learned to read and by practice became so useful and skillful with the pen that he could write in five different styles and by means of this accomplishment he wrote passes and secured freedom for five of his friends. Although he was suspected he was never proven to be the writer of the passes as invariably when writing for his master he used the same running round hand. Finally the plans for his own freedom were ripe and with his mother, wife and two children and his forged pass he left the land of bondage, coming directly to Michigan, where he has been employed ever since at his trade.

"German Syrup"

Asthma.

"I have been a great sufferer from Asthma and severe Colds every Winter, and last Fall my friends as well as myself thought because of my feeble condition, and great distress from constant coughing, and inability to raise any of the accumulated matter from my lungs, that my time was close at hand. When nearly worn out for want of sleep and rest, a friend recommended me to try thy valuable medicine, Boschee's German Syrup. I am confident it saved my life. Almost the first dose gave me great relief and a gentle refreshing sleep, such as I had not had for weeks. My cough began immediately to loosen and pass away, and I found myself rapidly gaining in health and weight. I am pleased to inform thee—unsolicited—that I am in excellent health and do certainly attribute it to thy Boschee's German Syrup. C. B. STICKNEY, Picton, Ontario."

MT. VERNON IN 1759.

Washington Hoped to Find Happiness in Seclusion.

In a letter from Mount Vernon, dated July 10, 1759, Washington wrote as follows: "I am now, I believe, fixed in this seat, with an agreeable partner for life, and I hope to find more happiness in retirement than I ever experienced in this wide and bustling world."

This was no utopian dream, transiently indulged amid the charms of novelty. It was a deliberate purpose with him, the result of innate and enduring inclination. Throughout the whole course of his career agricultural life appeared to have been the beau ideal of his existence which haunted his thoughts, even amid the stern duties of the field, and to which he recurred with unflinching interest, whenever unable to indulge his natural bias. Mount Vernon was his harbor of repose, where he repeatedly furling his sail and fancied himself anchored for life. No impulse of ambition tempted him thence, nothing but the call of his country and his devotion to the public good. The place was endeared to him by the memory of this brother, Lawrence, and of the happy days he had passed here with that brother in boyhood; but it was a delightful place in itself and well calculated to inspire the rural feeling. The mansion was beautifully situated on a swelling height crowned with wood and commanding a magnificent view up and down the Potomac. The grounds immediately about it were laid out somewhat in the English style. The estate was apportioned into separate farms devoted to different kinds of culture, each having its allotted laborers. Much, however, was still covered with wild woods, seamed with deep dells and running water and indented with inlets—haunts of deer, and lurking place of foxes. The whole woody region along the Potomac from Mt. Vernon to Belvoir and far beyond, with its range of forest and hills and picturesque promontories, affording sport of various kinds and was a noble hunting ground. Washington had hunted through it with old Lord Fairfax in his stripling days. We do not wonder that his feelings throughout his life incessantly reverted to it.

Glances Here and There.

The other day a smart little boy, who was carrying home a wash boiler from the "Fair," amused himself by holding it up to the sun and throwing the reflection in the office window across the way. It wasn't a good day for that sort of fooling, and the smart boy found it out. 'Twas near the end of the week's work and the employes on the different weeklies published in the building were hustling with the duties incidental to closing up their forms, and two or three of them were half blinded, before they discovered what occasioned their discomfort. The discovery was made in two or three offices at the same time, and then from that building arose a yell of rage, while a well directed bottle emphasized the command to move on, in such a business like manner, that the youth wisely concluded that both he, and his occupation had better be gone. But he left with an air of injured innocence, beautiful to see, and the story he told his mother, as he limped home with the boiler about those cruel newspaper men has doubtless convinced her that in a newspaper office the "devil" is a real personage.
